Could We Do without a Training Department ?

The training profession is at crossroads today. The innovative, rapid changes in various advanced online, mobile communication technology have greatly impacted people's working patterns, including ways of doing and learning. The younger generation has called for new order of things, regulatory authorities have asked for enhanced compliance while customers have demanded better quality as well as good value for money. As such, there are strong pressures for today's businesses to seriously review, adjust and transform themselves to meet all these major challenges while keeping their bottom lines. The training function is of no exception.

To brave the new world, just how would peers of the training profession boldly venture out to explore, adapt or adopt innovative approaches, learning tools and methodologies? Or would some even go as far for new experiments: simply do without training department, while looking after their employees' learning needs with entirely different approaches?

In this regard, the Institute ("ITP") has invited seasoned practitioners to share with you, at the forthcoming half-day Forum, their valuable real life experiences and insights, including pitfalls as well as success stories.

Date : 18 June, 2016 (Saturday)

Time : 10 am to 12:30 pm (Registration at 9:45 am)

Venue : UT, SCOPE Admiralty Learning Centre, 8/F, United Centre, 95 Queensway, Admiralty, Hong Kong.

Target Participants: Managers and People Development professionals who keenly want to reflect, keep themselves abreast of the times, and be better equipped so as to effectively benefit their organizations.
